I haven't had any problems except when I went to California last year. I was going to stay for a month and then go back home. I asked the girl in the hotel desk if it was OK to leave the car there as I didn't want to pay for parking. She said she didn't know how it would be treated. She called the police and when they came and told me to move the car she said "how do you know it's your car." We had to move it down the street to a lot where I have to pay for parking. I am unsure of my rights as to where I am able to leave my car but I am told that if I were to leave it at the hotel I would have to pay for parking. I have been a loyal customer since 1972. It still runs and drives. I have tried to buy a new one but I can't find one that good. Last edited by blvader on Sat Feb 16, 2012 8:31 pm, edited 1 time in total. Best thing you can do is buy a new one - even if you pay full retail or even a little over that. A new car is a life-changing purchase. Of course, the happy news is that the auto brand is likely to be better than the last one. If you think about the condition of the car (and that you've had it for so long) you may be able to get the car owner to buy the car back from you (less than full retail, I know). But you won't get much for it even if you did. I'd check the N.H. State DMVs website, www.mvs.com (if you're in New Hampshire). There should be an up-to-date vehicle registration history on file. While I can't vouch for the accuracy of the data, the car you've had it for so long may not have had a lot of miles on it. In any event, DMV data is a good first look for such a thing. This is a really high-quality fix-it-yourself project, but I think it's so, so important to be thorough (especially when you're dealing with a brand new car!) that I'd love to see your work: Who is online
